It seems that everyone likes a scary story. As autumn days grow shorter and darker, forcing us indoors, this is the perfect time to tell ghost stories.

Ghost stories and tales of the supernatural have been around for centuries and are a feature of nearly every culture. Though many people may not believe in ghosts today, stories about haunted castles, enchanted ruins and spooky spectres are still very popular.

Why do we like to be scared so much? One theory is that frightening stories cause a release of adrenaline which makes us feel a ‘rush’. Adrenaline is the same hormone that is released in a fight or flight situation, and, because there is no real danger, we enjoy this ‘thrill’. So we tell ghost stories around the campfire, go to frightening movies, read chilling novels – all in search of a spine-tingling sensation.

As October 31st approaches – and Halloween – why not use this opportunity to incorporate some ghostly language and tasks into your lessons?

READ A GHOST STORY

Why not set aside some time to read a ghost story to your students? It provides listening practice and can provide a welcome change from other types of activities.

Capture students’ interest by involving them in the story. Some ideas below:

- Read the title and ask students to predict what the story will be about.
- Stop at various points in the story and ask questions: Why do you think she did that? Who do you think this person is? What would you do if you were in a similar situation? What do you think will happen next?
- Give each student a word from the story. When they hear the word, ask them to raise their hand.
- Stop the story at an interesting point. Ask students to finish the story in pairs, share their endings, then read the ending to the story.
- Find out if students have heard similar stories.
- Ask students to write a dialogue between two main characters in the story.
- Ask students to write a news article based on the events in the story.
WRITE A GHOST STORY

To write a scary story, you need a scary setting, a scary plot line and plenty of scary words. Many ghost stories are set in old places which are in ruins. Castles and old houses are typical. Ghost stories also typically feature some sort of tragic event which causes the ghost to appear.

Writing a ghost story is a fun way to practice using narrative tenses and add interesting details through the use of adjectives and action verbs. Story writing is also an ideal way to differentiate, since students can write a story with as little or much detail and language variety as they can manage.

Before asking students to write a ghost story, do some preparation work to lay the foundations. You might want to review narrative tenses and pre-teach some vocabulary. To stimulate their imaginations, read or have students read a ghost story. You will find some excellent ghost stories at a range of levels in the Fantasy and Horror section in the Oxford Bookworms Library.

Use the following framework to help your students plan their story:

SETTING: (Where does the story take place?)
* e.g. an old, creepy abandoned school

CHARACTERS: (Who is in the story?)
* e.g. 6 friends having fun

SETTING THE SCENE: (What time of day? What’s the weather like?)
* e.g. It was a dark and stormy night, just after midnight

ACTION: (What happens in the story?)
* e.g. The 6 friends jumped over the locked fence and made their way into the school. They started writing graffiti on the black boards, playing loud music. They broke the desks so they could make a fire.

CLIMAX: (What’s the most exciting part of the story? How did the characters feel?)
* e.g. The dark, menacing form of the teacher appeared along with a bloodcurdling scream. The friends were petrified.
